$1,100

Text continues "The Australians and New Zealanders, combined with the Anglo-French forces in the Dardanelles, have already accomplished a feat of arms almost unexampled for its brilliance. To push the campaign to a successful conclusion, in each of the great Dominions, new and large contingents are preparing. The vital need is more and still more men. The limitations of material have been surmounted and there are arms and clothing sufficient to convert all recruits into efficient soldiers. I took office as a soldier, not as a politician; and I warned the country of the certainty that the war would be arduous and prolonged. I am of the same opinion now, and make an unrestricted call for men and a larger army. It is a matter for your conscience. Make up your minds quickly." Kitchener."
